FIRST PEOPLES PRINCIPLES OF LEARNING

Learning inherently supports the well-being of the self, the family, the community, the land, the spirits, and the ancestors.

Learning is holistic, reflexive, reflective, experiential, and relational (focused on connectedness, on reciprocal relationships, and a sense of place.)

Learning involves recognizing the interconnectedness of one's actions.

Learning involves generational roles and responsibilities.

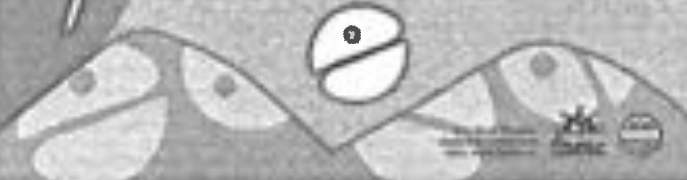

Learning recognizes the role of Indigenous knowledge.

Learning is embedded in memory, history, and story.

Learning involves patience and time.

Learning requires exploration of one's identity.

Learning involves recognizing that some knowledge is sacred and only shared with permission and/or in certain situations.

Shishikhem Language and Culture Program

Overall, 2018 Statistics Canada data shows 200,550 Indigenous people speak a First Nations language well enough to conduct a conversation. That's grown by 3.1 per cent since 2006. Most of those speakers learned the Indigenous language after English or French, which suggests young people are doing the reative to learn.

"Language is the cedar canoe which carries culture and healthy ways of living for its people. We all must work together to make sure the precious things we carry in this canoe are delivered to the next generation as intact as possible. In this way, we give our greatest gift to our children, their children, and the generations to come - we give them who we have been and who we are now - and we give them hope for a good life in the future."

- Shishikhem was introduced as a school based language program in District Elementary during the 1960's and has developed substantial momentum. The language continues to be taught at Min-Ay-Min, Kamahmish, Chateaux and Chateaux University.
- The work done by the Elders and other individuals, committees, in partnership with the school district, provided the foundation for the provincially approved 2001 curriculum for Shishikhem in 12 and introductory Shishikhem-11.
- Shishikhem is recognized by the Ministry of Education as an Indigenous Language - and can be taken to credit equivalent to French or any other Second Language or Foreign Language requirement for graduation.
- Shishikhem is recognized as a Language credit at many public secondary institutions in BC. In October 2017, UBC announced that a Grade 12 Indigenous Language credit, including Shishikhem, will be considered one of four Grade 12 courses for Indigenous students' minimum requirement for admission.
- SD46 and the Shishikhem program was chosen to receive a $400,000 grant from the Ministry of Education in order to support research and the institutional development of Indigenous Language Learning. For two years, language teachers and the Shishikhem Elders have discussed how Indigenous learners best acquire their traditional language. The result was the identification of the households that run up the Shishikhem Learning. Rita Proulx and Kerry Marlow have been involved in the development of the provincial framework for Indigenous Language Learning. In March, 2018, the program was chosen to receive $1,000,000 to support the development of learning materials that would support Indigenous Language Learning locally.
- In December 2018, the Shishikhem program at Chateaux, in partnership with the British Arts Festival received a $200,000 grant for the SYTATA Project. Shishikhem students spent time with Shishikhem Elders to do their 'cultural' - where students interviewed Elders to gain deeper understanding of Shishikhem history, culture and language. This included a display of student work at the Seawater Centre on October 1, 2017, and two stories featured in the SYTATA research presentation on October 3 and 4, 2017.
- Language students have been and will continue to visit elementary and secondary schools in the district to share their language and culture. The students and language staff are also engaged in doing outreach and presentations in the language of school district events. This provides authentic context for using the language.

The Shishikhem curriculum uses what is commonly referred to as the communicative-competence approach. In this approach, the focus of instruction is the functional use of language to perform real-life tasks, share views and give information, and get things done. Cultural instruction plays a supportive role to provide useful strategies to facilitate communication and comprehension.

- The communicative-competence approach includes the following objectives of Houseboats:
- As much as possible, language learning should happen while doing - it is a best physical response as much as intellectual one.
 - The goal of language learning is speaking and listening to the language rather than knowledge about the language.
 - Language learning is a process of discovery at various stages of child development.
 - Language learning develops over time.
 - Language learning is not the accumulation of partially connected elements of grammar and vocabulary. True, learner errors are to be expected.
 - Language proficiency involves both understanding and speaking. Understanding comes before speaking and writing.
 - Language is based on culture. Language use requires an understanding of the cultural context.
 - Language learning is a complex, multi-faceted process involving social and cultural contexts and involves teaching process strategies for successful language learning. Fluency is a life-long process and requires constant exposure and practice at home and in the community. The more the language is spoken at home and in the community, the better chance students will gain some fluency.
 - The ability to use language is facilitated when students actively engage in meaningful, authentic, and purposeful cultural and language-learning tasks.
 - Assessment reflects the instructional goals and strategies above.

- Increase the number of students involved in traditional song and dance - more they see the language in context.
- Increase the number of Language Learning units to district activities and the community - again providing context.
- Continue the development of a revised curriculum according to new BC Indigenous Language Learning Guidelines - this will allow them new approaches to learning.
- Increase awareness that secondary students can take Shishikhem to Grade 12 for graduation credit and admission to many post-secondary institutions.

Chekwelhp origin story pole raised at Gibsons Elementary

A long time ago, when only one man and his family lived near what's now called Gibsons, a brother appeared as if out of thin air. Motivated by greed, he sought to take all that he could, until a sea lion transformed from cedar arrived on the scene.

So begins the Skwxwú7-mesh origin story of Chek-welhp, the area around Gibsons and Langdale, and as of April 18, a totem pole stands at Gibsons Elementary School to commemorate that story.

“My vision was to tell the story of Chekwelhp ... one of our creation stories about the beginning of time and first man,” said carver Wes Nahanee, whose traditional name is Chiaxsten.

The first man, Tskan-chn, stands at the bottom of the nearly 18-foot (5.5-metre) pole. The sea lion is the second figure, and at the top of the pole is Sxelàltn, known as the greedy brother.

The idea for the welcome pole came as Gibsons Elementary was being built. “We wanted something that would be an opportunity for Indigenous students to walk on the campus and understand their culture is respected here,” said Kerry Mahlman, district principal, Aboriginal education.

The raising ceremony took place on April 19, but it took four years to complete the pole. The cedar was sourced from Twin Creek log sort, and because it was drenched with water it had to dry for two years until cracks could close up and form a smooth surface for carving. Nahanee then set to work. Eventually, the pole was sent back to North Vancouver, where Nahanee lives, so that he could work on it more consistently. It was shipped over with the help of Gibsons Building Supplies.

In order to get it ready for the raising, Nahanee recruited family members to help. After several 12- to 18-hour days of sanding and staining, the pole was ready.

“It was pretty emotional,” Nahanee said. “I’ve done other projects before but they’ve never affected me the way this one did.” His daughter attended Gibsons Elementary before his family moved to North Vancouver. “I felt so relieved it was done.”

By brushing the pole and carver with cedar boughs dipped in fresh water, a separation can occur, allowing the feelings wrapped up in the experience of carving to be washed away when the boughs are placed in a stream. Alroy Baker of the Skwxwú7mesh Nation spoke to the crowd about the ceremony and invited Nahanee to tell the origin story.

“Of course in an afternoon ceremony with kids sitting outside we didn’t want to spend as much time as we would love to hear the entire story, which is quite lengthy,” Mahlman said. Ceremony witnesses were Andy Johnson of shíshálh Nation, Keith Julius, SCRD director for shíshálh Nation, Patrick Bocking, superintendent of School District No. 46, and Deborah Luporini, principal of Gibsons Elementary School.

Origin stories are sacred, and Mahlman said SD46 staff is planning to meet with elders who will tell them the story in its complete form. That story may then be shared with the public. Mahlman is also planning a math unit that will draw on the physics and mathematics involved in raising the pole.

Reconciliation movement launches at longhouse

Former shíshálh Nation chief Garry Feschuk, who is recovering from a stroke, sat under two totem poles inscribed with legends of his people at the shíshálh Longhouse. Next to him stood his project partner, Cam Reid, a former Sechelt mayor and RCMP staff sergeant. The unlikely pair is spearheading what they call Syiyaya Reconciliation Movement, and on April 25, more than 200 people joined them at the longhouse to launch it.

Feschuk dedicated the evening “to the people who aren’t here to see it, and can’t share their story.”

Reid emphasized the movement's grassroots origins. "It's a fantastic opportunity, the [local] governments are behind us, but we need money," said Reid. The pair plans to involve members of shíshálh Nation and non-Indigenous Sunshine Coast residents in carving a Reconciliation Totem Pole and weaving Reconciliation Blankets.

It's not rare that public events take place at the longhouse, but it doesn't happen as often as it used to, Feschuk told Coast Reporter. He said he also wants more opportunities to bring non-Indigenous residents into the longhouse. "As part of this movement we're hoping to do some cultural awareness workshops," he said.

The evening began with a blessing and the calling of witnesses, followed by a feast of salmon, salads, desserts and coffee. After Feschuk and Reid introduced the movement, members of the Tl'ikw'am Dance Group performed under the guidance of Andy Johnson, cultural ambassador for shíshálh Nation and language teacher. Later in the evening, audience members were encouraged to participate in dances mimicking húpít (deer), s-chálihhten (salmon) and other animals.

The evening was punctuated by the accounts of elders and shíshálh community members, who spoke about what reconciliation means, as well as the experiences they endured as students of residential school, and the after-effects they have worked to overcome.

In 2012, a class action lawsuit was launched by the shíshálh Nation and Kamloops (tk'emlúps) Nation to seek compensation for residential students and their descendants, as well as bands that housed residential schools in or near their communities. The lawsuit is intended for those left out of the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, the largest class action settlement in Canadian history, because they or their descendants did not board at the schools but instead attended as day scholars. At the event, Feschuk spoke about the settlement, telling Coast Reporter afterwards, "It's ongoing and we're hoping to reach settlement soon."

Representatives from local government were also in attendance. Sechelt Mayor Bruce Milne spoke near the end of the event. "It's the truth we can't change that makes reconciliation so difficult," said Milne. "Reconciliation is about those truths that cannot be changed and won't be changed, but we have to bring together."

The organizing committee, which includes Randy Joe, Valerie Bourne, John Denham, Nancy Denham, Dale Sankey, Richard Till, Glen Martin, Siobhan Smith and Steven Feschuk, are collaborating on fundraising. They are selling T-shirts and asking for donations. They have also sought the support of local governments and plans are in the works to apply for grants. “These are just some of the ideas we have but we haven’t worked out those details yet,” said Feschuk.

Principles of Quality Assessment

Quality assessment

- is fair, transparent, meaningful and responsive to all learners
- focuses on all three components of the curriculum model – knowing, doing, understanding
- provides ongoing descriptive feedback to students
- is ongoing, timely, specific, and embedded in day to day instruction
- provides varied and multiple opportunities for learners to demonstrate their learning
- involves student in their learning
- promotes development of student self-assessment and goal setting for next steps in learning
- allows for a collection of student work to be gathered over time to provide a full profile of the learner and learning
